Celebrations were held in November 2008 to officially welcome the primary department of Samuel Rhodes School into their brand new surroundings, located on the Montem Community Campus in Hornsey.

The school, which caters for forty children with moderate learning difficulties, now has state-of-the-art facilities and specially designed classrooms that cater for the specific needs of the children. Interactive whiteboards, ICT and audio visual equipment, a good amount of space and close proximity to both a mainstream school and a children's centre will all make learning more fun and accessible for the pupils. The move will also enable pupils and their parents to feel part of an inclusive community.

Work included the alteration and refurbishment of various floors to create new facilities including a creative arts and music suite with mezzanine storage, ICT suite, library and offices.

Head teacher, Jackie Blount said "This is a fantastic opportunity for our pupils to feel part of an initiative which has been designed and built around their specific needs. The team that created the school have done a brilliant job. Pupils and staff alike are excited to come in and are enjoying the wonderful facilities."
