Quintin Kynaston School, in St. Johns Wood, is noted for having a large amount of students gifted in the arts field and it was here that Tony Blair chose to launch the 'Extended Schools' scheme.

Lakehouse has contributed to the improvement of the school over recent years by building a modern, airy, glazed and curved extension, providing a new cafeteria and servery facility.

The innovative design complemented the existing building perfectly and was a seamless addition to a school well known for famous students such as Suggs of 80's band Madness and RnB singer Shola Ama.
